

Large language models (LLMs) have emerged as a powerful tool to objectively quantify human memory recall performance. However, it remains unclear which specific architectures best align with the nuances of human memory. Some models are sensitive to the details, while others better capture the high-level gist of a memory. This project asks which models most accurately reflect these different levels of human recall.

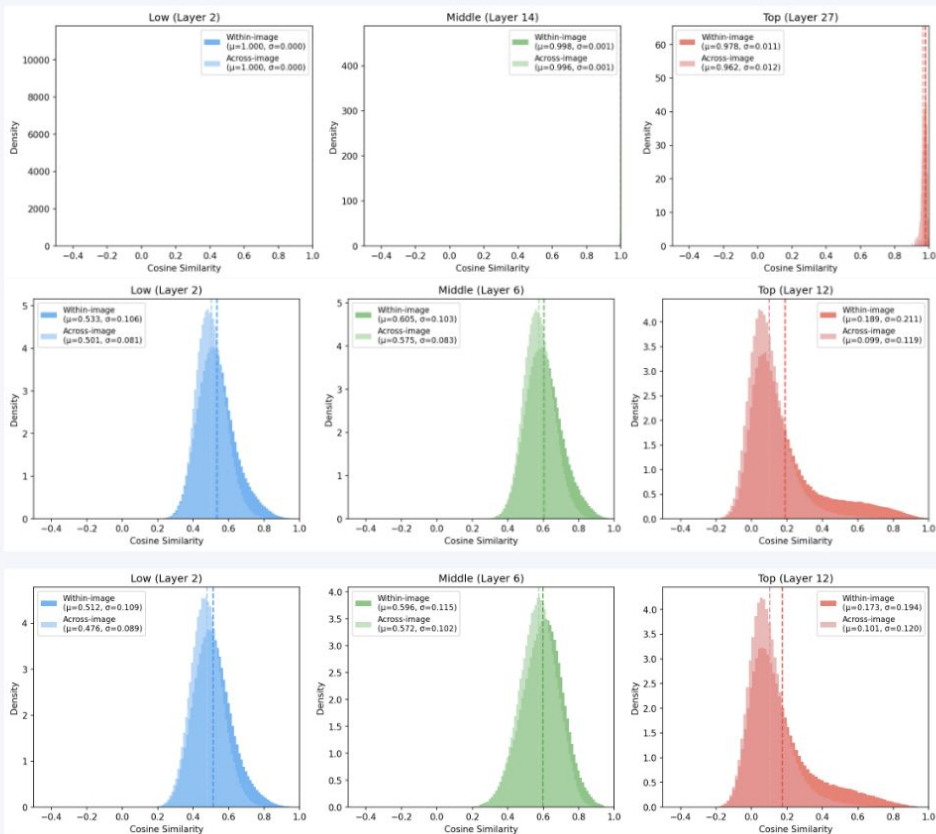

Model

Llama 3.2 (3B)

MPNet-base-v2

Sentence-
Transformers

Cosine Similarities

Max
Differential

0.016

0.09

0.072

Conclusions

AI Automation

Model Selection

Future Directions

Fine-Tuning